

Michael Kistler

is a street photographer living in Tokyo Japan. His passion for photography was sparked by a trip to Europe at age 18 and has since taken him to countless cities in over 30 countries chasing new images. A signature element in his work is the connection of people to the urban landscape; he is constantly exploring new and different ways to present movement and motion. In addition to having exhibited in Tokyo, Michael also teaches street photography classes and runs his own clothing company called Urban X, a concept he based on the graphic elements within his street images. Check out more of his work at:

www.urbanxonline.com

<http://www.flickr.com/photos/mkistler/>

<http://instagram.com/mdkistler/>

Mimo Khair

is a Lebanese/American freelance photographer based in Shanghai, China. She has been traveling the world during the last 15 years in search for her stories and images. She began her photographic journey in New York City where she lived after her studies and has since exhibited and published her work globally mostly focusing on social issues, human rights and children's rights as well as street photography and the arts. Mimo is currently teaching photography internationally and at home in Shanghai where she lives with her husband and young daughter. Links to Mimo's work:

<http://mimokhairphotography.com/>

<http://www.flickr.com/photos/mimokhair/>

<http://instagram.com/mimokhair>

